Visual Notetaking

Visual notetaking is a process of representing ideas non-linguistically. (That's a fancy way of saying, “drawing pictures.”) Visual notetaking can include concept mapping, but also more artistic ways of visually capturing and representing ideas. On the simpler side of the visual notetaking continuum, visual notes can be used to create narrated art. On the complex end of the spectrum, some visual notetaking applications support the creation of whiteboard animation videos which include audio narration synchronized to screencasts of drawings. Visual or graphic facilitation can be used at meetings to summarize presentations and guide discussions. Whether simple or complex, visual notes can be used to more deeply process information as well as communicate it to others with images.

Rachel Smith provides an excellent overview of visual notetaking, which she calls “visual recording,” in the first three minutes of her video, “Visual Recording on the iPad.”

Rachel's 18 minute TEDx talk, “Drawing in Class.” also provides an excellent overview about the “what and why” of visual notetaking.

Giulia Forsythe's 68 minute presentation for the 2012 University of Mary Washington Faculty Academy on “Drawing Conclusions” is also excellent. (SlideShare also available)

WORKFLOW

Initial Setup

1. Create an account and “channel” website to use for sharing visual notes. This can be a blog or photo sharing website.
2. Provide students with a method for submitting visual notes to a shared website. Email can be an easy way to share visual notes and photos of visual notes captured with smartphones or tablet computers. Some sites permit moderation of submitted images, other sites use a “secret email address” which automatically posts to the website.

Ongoing Use

1. Invite students to create visual notes of lectures or specific curriculum elements.

2. Provide students with an email address to post visual notes to a class website.
